The Changing Pattern of Terrorism

Akhmad Najibul Khairi

Institut Agama Islam Negeri (IAIN) Sunan Ampel, Surabaya

najib@uinsby.ac.id

Abstrak

Tidak dapat dipungkiri bahwa perang melawan terorisme dipercaya sebagai salah satu bentuk perang dunia yang imbasnya merambah ke berbagai negara. Hal ini dapat dipahami setelah apa yang sudah terjadi apalagi pasca tragedi 9/11 yang semakin mengkristalkan perlawanan terhadap aksi terorisme. Sekilas melihat perkembangan persoalan tersebut, terorisme diyakini lahir dari ketidakpuasan dan ketidakadilan di masyarakat. Namun, pada perkembangan selanjutnya, terorisme juga diartikan sebagai suatu bentuk simbol dari kebencian terhadap Barat. Menurut analisa Peter Berger, gerakan terorisme semakin hari semakin sulit untuk dilacak dan diantisipasi karena sifatnya yang sering kali berubah-ubah. Artikel ini ingin mengulas perubahan-perubahan yang terjadi dalam gerakan terorisme dunia, sekaligus mengurai evolusi tujuan dan misi dari gerakan tersebut. Kesimpulan yang diperoleh dari artikel ini adalah bahwa gerakan terorisme itu mempunyai banyak bentuk dari gerakan teroris non-Negara, kelompok-kelompok ideologis, kelompok-kelompok politik berbasis agama. Semua gerakan ini mempunyai taktik, strategi, organisasi, dan garis komando yang terdesentralisasi dengan baik. Temuan dalam artikel ini juga menunjukkan bahwa gerakan konter-terorisme dengan membombardir pusat-pusat teroris seperti Afganistan, dan Iraq dan menangkap dan atau membunuh petinggi-petinggi teroris seperti Al-Qaeda ataupun JI tidak menghentikan gerakan terorisme karena mereka akan bermetamorfosis ke dalam bentuk gerakan lain.

Kata kunci: Terorisme, Barat, al-Qaeda, Kelompok Radikal.

Introduction

The international war against terrorism is considered as the first genuinely global war. This is symbolized by trends such as the increasing tendency of countries to take part in international cooperation to prevent security threats. Global war against terrorism became more prominent after the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon in the United States, referred to as 9/11. Terrorism took root due to the growing sense of dissatisfaction and injustice in society and the inability of governments to realize the hopes and demands growing in these communities. Reliance on ideology whether Marxism-Leninism, nationalism or religion, has increased.[1] These ideologies become part of an effort to legitimize the various practices of violence that become the core of terrorism.

Meanwhile, acts of terror associated with the hatred against Western domination HAVE spread, not only in the countries that are considered part of Western hegemony, but also IN countries that do not have direct links with the United States, United Kingdom, or Australia. Indonesia is an example, having been rocked by four suicide bombings associated with transnational terrorism network: the Bali bombing on 12 October 2002, the Marriot hotel bombing on 5 August 2003, Australian Embassy bombing in Jakarta on 9 September 2004, and the second Bali bombing on 1 October 2005.[2] This does not include a number of terrorist acts carried out in Indonesia during the year 2001 until the year 2010, which targeted public facilities which were symbols of the West, like McDonalds Restaurant, Kentucky Fried Chicken Restaurant, and others. Other countries have also experienced similar incidents as happened in Indonesia. For instance, Turkey, Pakistan and India have experienced several acts of terror in the name of religion, as a symbol of hatred against the West.

Peter Bergen says that the actions of terrorist groups after 9/11 tend to be less anticipated. Tactics have changed as groups adjust to the

---

[1] B Hoffman, Inside Terrorism (New York: Columbia University Press, 2006), 38.

[2] Tan, A.T (ed.). A Hand Book of Terrorism and Insurgency in Southeast Asia. (Cornwall: Edward Elgar Publishing Limited, 2007), 38.

Global War against terrorism. The target of transnational terrorist groups is no longer the homeland of Western countries such as the United States, the United Kingdom or Australia, but on the assets associated with the Western countries throughout the world. He said that, in the case of bombing in the subway station and airport in the United Kingdom, terrorist acts can still occur suddenly in Western countries.

The various examples mentioned above actually confirm that the patterns of terrorism or terrorist organizations have changed and evolved. These changes reflect the changes in the goals/objectives of terrorism, as well as the organization of terrorism, which tend to scatter after the fall of Taliban regime. Also people from a number of prominent terrorist organizations, both at the local, regional and transnational level were arrested and killed.[3] In addition, the existence of peace agreements in several countries that have conflicts with local terrorist groups increasingly complement the initial hypothesis that the effect of the Global War on Terrorism post-event 9/11 has changed the patterns and movements of terrorist groups around the world. The question I have addressed in this essay is how terrorist organizations have changed and evolved? Therefore, this essay will explain some of the changing pattern of terrorism/terrorist group slightly, and will focus more on the new pattern of organizational structure and command of terrorist group.

Patterns of Change

Firstly, there is the changing nature of terrorist organizations' ideology and goals. Throughout history the ideologies of terrorist groups have been diverse, ranging from Marxism-Leninism, ultra-nationalism, religious-based ideology, and others.[4] Even some of terrorist organizations have mixed their ideology. For example, the PKK's (the Kurdistan Workers Party) ideology is a mix of Islam, Marxism-Leninism combined with Kurdish nationalism. Another example is the Moro

---

[3] Rohan Gunaratna, Countering Terrorism: Can We Meet the Threat of Global Violence? (London: Reaktion Book Ltd, 2007), 437.
[4] Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 84.

Islamic Liberation Front, the Pattani rebellion in southern Thailand which has adopted an ideology that is a mix between radical Islamism and nationalism. The Nationalism-Catholicism ideology in Northern Ireland is another example. Meanwhile, there are more radical terrorist organizations such as the Red Army in Japan, based on a Marxist-Leninist ideology that operated outside Japan. Hoffman,[5] moreover, argues that in the height of the Cold War the majority of terrorist groups are left-wing, revolutionary Marxist-Leninist ideological organizations and the other terrorist groups are ethno-nationalist/separatist organizations which happened in some countries such as in Bosnia, Chechnya, Nagorno Karabakh, and other parts of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.

However, in 1990s there was a rapid increase in the number of religious terrorist groups, while on the other hand the number of ethno-nationalist terrorist groups decreased significantly. In 1994, it was reported that 16 or one-third of the 49 terrorist movements, were classified as religious terrorist movements. This number increased in 1995, with about 46 % (twenty-six terrorist groups) of the fifty-six groups identified as being religious terrorist organizations. The trend was increasing in 2004, with about 52 groups, or forty-six percent of terrorist organizations that existed that year, being classified as religious in character, while 32 groups, or 28% were left-wing groups, and 24 groups, or twenty-one percent were ethno-nationalist terrorist groups.[6]

Another trend shows that the ideology of terrorism tends to be 'conical' in shape in terms of Islamic-based ideology. Jaish Mohammed/JEM (Army of Mohammed), a Muslim extremist group based in Pakistan and formed by Masood Azhar in early 2000, Ansar al-Islam/AI (aka Partisans of Islam, Helpers of Islam, Supporters of Islam), a radical Islamist group of Iraqi Kurds and Arabs formed in September 2001, the Tunisian Combatant Group/TCG or the Jama'a Combattaante Tunisienne aiming to form an Islamic regime in Tunisia established in

---

[5] Ibid,. 85.
[6] Ibid,. 86.

2000, are all examples of Islamic terrorist groups that were founded in the year 2000.[7]

There were a greater number of terrorist attacks in the early years of twenty-first century, such as, the September 11 2001 attacks, known as (9/11), the target being the World Trade Center Tower and the Pentagon, in which more than 3000 people were killed and thousands were wounded. There was also the Madrid train bombing on 11 March 2004, in which 191 were killed and 1800 were wounded. The 7 July 2005 London bombing, also known as 7/7, was carried out by extremist Muslims.

The goals and the objectives of terrorist organizations are varied and diverse, namely, to create terror and disrupt socio-political stability in a state, to end the Western countries hegemony, separatism, and/or to form an international Islamic government. However, each group has specific objectives according to their typology and motivation. Ethno-nationalist groups (or separatist organization) such as the Basque Fatherland and Liberty (Euzkadi Ta Askatasuna, ETA), formed in 1959 aim at establishing a state based on Marxism in northern Spain. They have been involved in the bombing and killing of Spanish Government officials, politicians and so on. The Kurdistan Worker's Party is one of the groups that use violence and terror to gain independence from Turkey and establish a democratic Kurdish State in the Middle East. Thus, according to Williams in regional terrorism where only one nationality and country is involved, it often involves separatist or ethno-nationalist separatism.[8]

Ideological terrorist groups, for example The Red Brigades, which waged a campaign against the Italian Republic in the 1970s and 1980s, aimed at creating a neo-communist state and socio-economic system. Another example of this type is the German Baader-Meinhof, and the Japanese Red Army. Examples of religious-political groups (National Liberation Organizations), are Hamas and Fatah, whose

---

[7] C William, Terrorism Explained, the Fact About Terrorism and Terrorist Groups (Adelaide: New Holland Publishers, 2004), 177.
[8] Ibid, 39.

objective is to create an Islamic Republic of Palestine and ultimately dismantle the state of Israel.[9]

On the other hand, the new pattern of terrorist groups, known as International/transnational terrorist groups, such as Al Qaeda, is motivated by primarily anti-Western religious ideology.[10] Their absolute objective is changing the entire international system. They tend to focus more on the desire to break and end the Western hegemony, especially by the United States of America, whose leaders are as considered to be the infidels and the enemy of Islam, and to force the United States to withdraw from Muslim lands. Another objective is to change Muslim regimes that they consider of betraying the true Islam and of coalition with the US and its allies.

The global war against terrorism led by the United States government, and its policy to act as the police of the world, who can justify all their actions, together with the US foreign policy toward the Palestine-Israel conflict has raised the hatred of individuals, groups and even countries, both towards the US and its Allies. Under the Bush administration, the United States has labelled some countries as the 'axis of evil' and certain organizations as terrorist movements. As a consequence, dissatisfaction emerged, especially in third world countries. However, other terrorist organizations with different purposes, also still exist in some countries.

Turning to the terrorist group's target and tactic, traditional terrorist group intend to produce a political effect through the injury or death of the victim.[11] They want to destabilize the normal political condition and create political change in a local, regional even international through mass destruction. The objective is to pressure the authority to concede their demands.[12] They attacked "symbolic" targets

---

[9] B Ganor, Terrorist Organisation Typologies and The Probability of A Boomerang Effect, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism (London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2008), 271-272.

[10] M Juergensmeyer, Terror in the Mind of God (Barkeley: University of California Press, 2003), 127.

[11] D.J. Whittaker, (ed.), The Terrorism Reader (New York: Routledge, 2003), 16.

[12] D.M. Jones (ed.), Globalization and the New Terror (Cheltenham: Edward Elgar, 2004), 30 representing the source of their hostility or kidnapped and assassinated specific people whom they considered guilty of economic exploitation or political repression.

For example, left-wing terrorists like German Red Army Faction (RAF) and the Italian Red Brigades (RB) have selectively kidnapped and assassinated people whom they blamed for economic exploitation or political repression in order to attract publicity and promote a Marxist-Leninist revolution. Similarly, Hamas and Hezbollah have specific target, mostly the Israeli military that they considered as their enemy who occupy Palestinian territory and Southern Lebanon respectively.

Generally, all terrorist groups have one trait in common: They do not commit actions randomly or senselessly. Their purpose is aimed at gaining publicity. According to Brian Jenkins "terrorist wants a lot of people watching and a lot of people listening and not a lot of people dead". Jenkins continued to argue that "Terrorist operate on the principle of the minimum force necessary, they find it unnecessary to kill many, as long as killing a few suffices for their purposes".[13] By causing disorder, disturbing socio-political stability of a state, they hope that dramatic and shocking incidents of violence will attract attention of the media and, in turn, of the public and government as well.

On the other hand, the new pattern of terrorist groups, known as International/transnational terrorist group, such as Al Qaeda, they targeted terror no longer in gaining publicity, but in causing carnage on massive scale.[14] Through Osama bin Laden and Aymân al-Zawâhirî (both are the supreme leaders of Al Qaeda), that Al Qaeda and its affiliates should "Kill Westerners. Kill American. Kill Jews". This message conformed to the fatwa issued on 23 February 1998 that announced the setting up of a World Islamic Front for Jihad and declared that 'it is the duty of all Muslims to kill US citizens –civilian or military--, and their allies everywhere'. Therefore, they do not have any specific target but to kill a lot of people that are assumed as Westerners, American, and Jews. The event of 9/11 is the example of international terrorist attacks which killed more than 3000 people, and thousands of people were injured.

---

[13] Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 270.

[14] T.J. Wilkinson, Archaeological Landscapes of the Near East (Tucson: The University of Arizona Press, 2003), 34.

Another new trend is that the threat of terrorist attack is shifting from military, political and diplomatic targets to economic targets. Al Qaeda estimated that it would cost the United States would US$ 1 million dollars in every one dollar spent by Al Qaeda. In the event of 9/11, the United States suffered from several losses, human lives (insurance costs), property costs, emergency response and clean-up costs, health effects, temporary housing, lost employee income, lost employee income, lost expenditures, lost tax revenues, travel delays for commuters etc. Its estimated that the World Trade Center attack cost $ 80 billion.[15]

Similarly, the attacks on the U.S navy destroyer USS Cole (DDG 67) on October 12, 2000, in Aden Yemen by terrorist using small motorboat caused long impact of economic deterioration such as the decline in Yemen shipping revenue.[16] Moreover, the Bali bombing 1 had impact on the stability of Indonesian national economy. The decline in tourism revenue, loss of income, the replacement costs of damaged goods and infrastructure were very costly.

The economic targets rarely appeared in traditional terrorist group. As mentioned earlier, they kidnapped or killed specific persons or figureheads that they blamed as enemies and, or attack a symbolic public infrastructure to attract media, public and in turn a government's attention.

There has been a new phenomenon occurring in terrorist groups in that some of the terrorist movements have ended their conflicts with regimes and made peace agreement to avoid being labeled as a terrorist organization, and changed into formal organizations with the aim of enhancing their bargaining power with the authorities. However, this trend is not new, having already occurred in the Palestine Liberation

---

[15] W Enders, The Political Economy of Terrorism (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2006), 1.
[16] Ibid., 203.

Organization (PLO).[17] The PLO acted as an umbrella organization, consisting of numerous militant factions as well as other Palestinian associations. The Palestine Liberation Organization acted as a Palestinian legal representative in negotiating with Israel authorities with respect to the liberation of Palestine from Israeli control.[18] The PLO had an agreement with Israel to form the Palestinian Authority to govern the domestic affairs in Gaza and the West Bank, while the PLO has responsibility for external affairs, particularly in Lebanon.[19] Similarly, Gerakan Aceh Merdeka (Free Aceh Movement) in Indonesia, after reaching a peace agreement with Indonesian authorities, officially signed on 15 August 2005, changed into two political parties, Partai Aceh and Partai SIRA.[20] Interestingly, the Aceh party (or parties) won the election and had the majority of seats in the provincial parliament.

Another example is Hezbollah which is still considered an Islamic terrorist group by the United States of America, Israel and some Western countries. It is considered similar to Al Qaeda but operates in the context of National Liberation, just like Hamas. Part of the reason for this is that, Hezbollah killed more than 240 marines in an attack on marine barracks in 1983. Both of these organizations have fought Israel in the Lebanese and Palestinian contexts, respectively.[21] Hezbollah has transformed itself from a radical, clandestine militia to a moderate organization, and has participated in Lebanese general elections.

Local people see Hezbollah as a political movement and a social service that has done everything that a government should do, from collecting the garbage to running hospitals and repairing schools.[22] Winning hearts and minds, Hezbollah has not only armed and political wings – it also boasts an extensive social development program. The

---

17 Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 74.
18 A Mannes, Profiles in Terror; The Guide to Middle East Terrorist Organization (United States: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, Inc, 2004), 269.
19 Ibid., 288.
20 Ben Hillman, "Aceh's Rebels Turn to Ruling". Far Eastern Economic Review, Vol. 170, No. 1 (January-February 2007), 51.
21 P.P. Harik, Hezbollah, the Changing Face of Terrorism (London: I.B. Tauris & Co. Ltd, 2005),1.
22 Ibid., 196.

group currently operates at least four hospitals, 12 clinics, 12 schools and two agricultural centres that provide farmers with technical assistance and training. It also has an environmental department and an extensive social assistance program. Medical care is also cheaper than in most of the country's private hospitals and free for Hezbollah members. Most of these institutions are located in the country's more marginalized areas, such as Beirut's southern suburbs, in South Lebanon and in the Beka Valley.[23]

The changing patterns of terrorist organizations relate to the pattern of organizational structure and command. The orthodox organization of terrorist movements is diagrammatically represented by the pyramid,[24] which means that they were organized along the lines of the predominant hierarchical model of other organizations, existing in all political, social and religious structures in the world today. Thus the organization was similar to that which existed in governments, corporations and the military, with the mass of the members at the bottom and the leaders at the top. There are clear divisions of authority between the leadership, officials, activists and supporters. The decisions made at the top of the international terrorist organizations were communicated to and carried out by those below, including in regional and local areas.[25] In short, it is a well-defined command and control apparatus.[26]

The Lebanese Hezbollah, for example, has been known to be governed "on the national and local level by the supreme political-religious leadership, composed of a small and selected group of Lebanese ulama".[27] The Hezbollah is governed by the Majlîs al-Shûrâ (Consultative Assembly) which is headed by 12 senior clerical members (including the Secretary-General who is elected every two years) with responsibility for tactical decisions and supervision of overall Hezbollah activity

---

[23] Ibid., 197.

[24] Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 271.

[25] B Ganor, Terrorist Organisation Typologies and The Probability of A Boomerang Effect, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism (London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2008). 276.

[26] Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 267.

[27] B. Nacos, Terrorism and counterterrorism, understanding threats and responses in the post-9/11 world (New York: Longman Publisher, 2008), 147.

throughout Lebanon. Within the Majlîs al-Shûrâ, there existed seven specialized committees dealing with ideological, financial, military and political, judicial, informational and social affairs. In turn, the Majlîs al-Shûrâ and these seven committees were replicated in each of Hezbollah's three main operational areas (the Beqaa, Beirut, and the South). In December 1989, Hezbollah formed a new body known as Majlîs al-Shûrâ al-Karrar (the Deciding Assembly) to control the administration of Hezbollah.[28]

More recently, however, terrorist movements have abandoned the hierarchical structure and adopted the "leaderless resistance".[29] Sageman calls it "Leaderless Jihad". They tend to use a linear structure rather than a hierarchical one.[30] The aim is to prevent governments from destroying the movements. These kinds of terrorist group are organised in loosely interconnected, semi-independent cells that have no single commanding hierarchy.

The basic characteristic of the structure is that there is no explicit communication between cells which are otherwise acting toward the same goals.[31] Members of one cell usually have little or no specific information on who else is agitating on behalf of their cause. All groups and individuals operate independently from one another and from a central command. Although, they are less competent in technique and tactics, they have freedom and independence in decision-making and in the operation of terror attacks.[32]

Consequently, the absence of a central command authority has the potential to give a terrorist more opportunities and freedom to commit acts of violence, which, in turn, makes them more unpredictable and uncontrollable. However, a top leader is still crucial. Leaderless movements may often have symbolic figureheads. It can be a public figure or an inspirational author, who picks generic targets and

---

[28] Mannes, Profiles in Terror, 159.

[29] Nacos, Terrorism and counterterrorism, 148.

[30] B Hoffman, Change and Continuity in Terrorism, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism, 418).

[31] M Sageman, Leaderless Jihad: Terror Networks in the Twenty-First Century (Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2008), 145.

[32] B Hoffman, Inside Terrorism (New York: Columbia University Press, 2006), 272.

objectives, but does not actually manage or execute plans.[33] Leaders communicate their intention periodically and non-specifically, including by making public pronouncements. Groups are affiliated through both formal and informal links. Decision-making and operations are often highly decentralized. A good example of this is Osama bin Laden, the leader of Al Qaeda, and his deputy Aymân al-Zawâhirî. They did not try to impose their authority, but nevertheless proved themselves as main figure. This model of terrorism is also termed "phantom cell networks", "autonomous leadership unit", "network of networks", or "lone wolves".[34]

Al Qaeda: The "Network of Networks" Terrorism

Al Qaeda means "the Base", which is based in Afghanistan, is the most visible manifestation of the terrorist threat. It operates as a transnational terrorism organization comprised of multinational individuals and fundamentalist Sunnis calling for global Jihad with multinational members.[35] This transnational terrorist group is the best example of how the terrorist movement has evolved and changed from the hierarchical model terrorist group into its new incarnation, the "network of networks" terrorist group.[36] Al Qaeda is the most threatening terrorist group in relation to the stability of world security. To exist, adapt and survive, it has evolved and reorganized through several stages. The first was top-down command to manage its tactics and strategies. The second was a "network of networks". The third was by using a guerrilla base and the last was interlinks with another transnational or separatist rebel groups.[37]

---

[33] Nacos, Terrorism and counterterrorism, 150.
[34] Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 271.
[35] Mannes, Profiles in Terror, 18.
[36] B Hoffman. The Changing Face of Al Qaeda and the Global War on Terrorism, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism, Vol. 27 (London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2004). 552.
[37] Gunaratna, Inside Al Qaeda, 57.

Structurally, Al Qaeda was a unitary organization,[38] with a centralized, top-down organization,[39] which had many characteristics of a hierarchical organization. It had permanent installations, fixed structure, standardized methods and regular procedures. The structure of Al Qaeda consisted of the emir as the top leader, Osama bin Laden), advised by Majlîs al-Shûrâ, or a consultative council, consisting of high echelon apparatus and very experienced cadres, such as Dr. Aymân al-Zawâhirî, Abû Ayûb al-Irâqî, Abû Ḥafs al-Khâbir.[40] Below the Majlîs al-Shûrâ there were four committees: a military one that was responsible for recruiting, training, procuring, transporting and launching military operations as well as developing tactics and strategies, a finance, a religious and a media committee.[41]

In August 1996, al-Qaeda announced its jihad to expel foreign troops and interests from what they considered Islamic lands. Bin Ladîn issued a fatwa, which amounted to a public declaration of war against the United States of America and any of its allies, and began to refocus al-Qaeda's resources towards large-scale, propagandist strikes.[42]

On February 23, 1998, Osama bin Laden and Aymân al-Zawâhirî, a leader of an Egyptian Islamic Jihad, along with three other Islamist leaders, co-signed and issued a fatwa (binding religious edict) calling on Muslims to kill Americans and their allies where they could and when they could.[43] Under the banner of the World Islamic Front for Combat against the Jews and Crusaders they declared:

> The ruling to kill the Americans and their allies—civilians and military—is an individual duty for every Muslim who can do it in any country in which it is possible to do it, in order to liberate the al-Aqsa Mosque [in Jerusalem] and the holy mosque [in Makka] from their grip, and in order for their armies to move out of all the lands of Islam, defeated and unable to threaten any Muslim.

---

[38] Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 283.
[39] Gunaratna, Inside Al Qaeda, 134.
[40] Ibid*.,* 57.
[41] Mannes, Profiles in Terror, 35.
[42] Gunaratna, Inside Al Qaeda, 42.
[43] P Wilkinson, Terrorism versus Democracy, the Liberal State Respons. (New York: Routledge, 2006), 5.

> This is in accordance with the words of Almighty Allah, 'and fight the pagans all together as they fight you all together,' and 'fight them until there is no more tumult or oppression, and there prevail justice and faith in Allah'.[44]

Al-Qaeda has attacked targets, civilian and military, in various countries, most notably, the September 11 attacks on New York City and Washington, D.C. in 2001. The U.S. government responded by launching the War on Terror. According to the results of the Strategic Survey, published by the International Institute for Strategic Studies based in London, at least 18,000 Al Qaeda members were trained in camps in Afghanistan during the period between 1996 and 2001.[45] However, this number has been reduced as most of the cadres were killed and arrested as a result of the global war against terrorism. In 2001, Gunaratna stated that the core force of Al Qaeda consisted of more than 3000 members, along with linkages with terrorist groups that spread out all over the world, in at least 60 countries.

Wilkinson identifies Al Qaeda major affiliates and support groups: "Egypt (Jihad Islamic Group), Algerian (GIA and GSPC), Libya (Libyan Islamic Fighting Group), Lebanon (Asbât al-Anṣâr), Kashmir/Pakistan (Lashkar el Tayyiba, Ḥarakat al-Mujâhidîn, Lashkar e Jhangvi, Jaish e Mohammad), Indonesia (Jemaah Islamiyah –Islamic Group--), Iraq (Al Qaeda Jihad Organization Mesopotamia, Anṣâr al Islâm), Yemen (Islamic Army of Yemen), Morocco (Morroccan Islamic Combatant Group), Afghanistan (Ḥizb al Islâm/Gulbuddin), Saudi Arabia (Al Qaeda in Arabian peninsula), Europe (various localized networks including the Secret Organization of Al Qaeda in Europe), Africa (various localized networks especially in East Africa)".

William[46] argues that the "link from, or with Al Qaeda" has several characteristics including funding for a spiritual leader's activities.

---

[44] Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 95.

[45] B Hoffman, The Changing Face of Al Qaeda and the Global War on Terrorism, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism, Vol. 27 (London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2004), 552.

[46] C. William, Terrorism Explained, the Fact About Terrorism and Terrorist Groups (Adelaide: New Holland Publishers, 83-84.

Al Qaeda, for example, has provided military training in Afghanistan, Pakistan or elsewhere or trainers at a local level. It has financed operational and logistical support, such as the provision of weapons.

Al Qaeda also has attempted to strengthen its regional operation. William also describes the kind of connections between regional terrorist groups and individuals as including "affiliated" groups that are considered as part of Al Qaeda networks, which operate in Muslim societies or countries with Islamic communities, and "associated" free actors, such as Ramzie Yousef the bomber of the World Trade Centre in 1993, who was supported by Al Qaeda.[47] He (siapa?) also describes other connections such as the "empathetic" one, which consists of a group of terrorists driven by local problems, but who have developed links with Al Qaeda, such as Gerakan Aceh Merdeka (GAM), the Free Aceh Movement in Indonesia. This movement has Al Qaeda representatives in some regions, such as Omar Al Faruq). Gunaratna adds another type which consists of Al Qaeda cells operating in the West.[48] All these types of connection involve the sharing of expertise, the transfer of resources, discussion of strategy and even the conducting of joint operations.

Decentralization

Since the invasion of Afghanistan in October 2001, followed by Iraq in March 2003, the Al Qaeda operational home base was destroyed. More than half of its leaders and higher echelon members were killed or arrested, such as Abu Zubaidah, Khaled Sheikh Muhammad, Abdullah al Rahim al Nishiri, Ramzi bi al Shibh and Taufik bin Attash.[49] In addition more than 3400 cadres were killed or arrested.[50] Moreover, financial support was reduced as their assets had been frozen. As a consequence,

---

[47] Ibid., 83-84.
[48] Gunaratna, Inside Al Qaeda, 95.
[49] William, C. 2004. Terrorism Explained, the Fact About Terrorism and Terrorist Groups. Adelaide: New Holland Publishers. 512.
[50] W Enders, The Political Economy of Terrorism (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2006), 189.

the power of Al Qaeda weakened. However, Al Qaeda senior leader, Aymân al-Zawâhirî denies this, and claims that Al Qaeda is still strong and capable of carrying out attacks at least twice per year.[51]

Nevertheless, Al Qaeda did suffer from the loss of its operational leaders and main base. In order to continue existing, Al Qaeda has changed its strategy. The weakened Al Qaeda has relied on individual, regional and local terrorist groups worldwide to retain and regain its strong presence. Therefore, Al Qaeda has formed networks with local and regional radical groups aiming to influence and transform a global jihadist mind-set.[52] These networks cover leadership, planning and operational matters, financial matters, training and equipment support as well as propaganda and several other functions.[53]

Al Qaeda has decentralized, deregulated and regionalised. All local, regional terrorist group networks and individuals are semi-autonomous, being able to make their own decisions and operate independently or, at the very least, follow broad general directions. The supreme leader, Osama bin Laden does not have to be in command or have central control.[54] Jessica Stern has noted:

> "In one article on the 'culture of jihad' available on-line, a Saudi Islamist urges bin Laden sympathizers to take action without waiting for instructions. "I do not need to meet the Sheikh (Osama bib Laden) and ask his permission to carry out some operation", he writes, "the same as I do not need permission to pray, or to think about killing Jews and the Crusaders that gather on our lands".[55]

One of the focuses of this essay is on the links between Al Qaeda and terrorist groups existing in Southeast Asia. Abuza identifies several reasons why this region became one of the main focus points in Al Qaeda's terrorist campaign. Most of the countries in this region are considered as "countries of convenience". These countries are very

---

[51] Hoffman, Inside Terrorism, 283.
[52] Gunaratna, Inside Al Qaeda, 437.
[53] Ibid., 438.
[54] Ibid.
[55] Nacos, Terrorism and counterterrorism, 150.

conducive to operation at a local level since they suffer from a lack of law and order, poorly regulated banking, increasing corruption especially in security and the police department, border problems and the easy availability of weapons. Secondly, the aim is the spread of the Islamic fundamentalist views, such as Wahhabism especially Deobandism.

Al Qaeda has sought out Jemaah Islamiyah (Islamic Group) and it has become his close ally in the region. Most of the members of Jemaah Islamiyah are the remnants of Mujahidin fighters who trained and joined the war in Afghanistan. Jemaah Islamiyah (Islamic Group) is believed to have cells spanning Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand. Jemaah Islamiyah has its roots in Dâr al-Islâm (DI, meaning "House of Islam"), a radical movement in Indonesia in the 1940s that aimed to establish a unified Islamic nation based on Shari'ah among the countries of Southeast Asia.[56]

It was formally founded on January 1, 1993, by Jemaah Islamiyah leaders, Abu Bakar Bashir and Abdullah Sungkar, both are strongly influenced by Osama bin Laden's terrorist ideology and methodology, aiming to create an Islamic state comprising the Southeast Asia region of Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, the Southern Philippines and southern Thailand. Soon after its founding, Jemaah Islamiyah became an Al-Qaeda affiliate, receiving financial and material support from the group. Several top Jemaah Islamiyah operatives even received instruction in Afghan training camps. In terms of terrorist action, the Jemaah Islamiyah has been responsible for a number of recent and deadly terrorist attack in Southeast Asia, including the Bali bombing on 12 October 2002, the Marriott Hotel on 5 August 2003, the Australian Embassy in Jakarta on 9 September 2004, and the second Bali bombing on 1 October 2005.[57] It has also been responsible for the newest bombing on the JW. Marriot and Ritz Carlton hotel on 17 July 2009.

---

[56] B Hoffman, The Changing Face of Al Qaeda and the Global War on Terrorism, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism, Vol. 27 (London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2004), 550.
[57] A.T Tan (ed.), A Hand Book of Terrorism and Insurgency in Southeast Asia (Cornwall: Edward Elgar Publishing Limited, 2007), 38.

In its first founding, Jemaah Islamiyah employed a top-down hierarchical organisation. The leader (Amîr), a leadership council (Markâz) and consultative councils (Shûrâ) oversaw four geographic divisions (Mantiqi). Each Mantiqi ws divided into smaller sub-groups (as represented below) which administered Jemaah Islamiyah activity appropriate to their area. Mantiqi I and IV were focused on fundraising. Mantiqî II was focused on leadership and recruitment. Mantiqî III was focused on training.[58] This mirrored the organization within Al Qaeda, due to the effect of the global war against terrorism. Because their leaders and members were arrested, Jemaah Islamiyah transformed into cells and clandestine networks or morphed into local groups.

Jemaah Islamiyah has a strategy of recruitment and expansion of cells, religious indoctrination and training of its members, and instigation of sectarian conflict. Guntur Romli, reinforcing what Abuza argued, states that in order to expand their networks and cells, Jemaah Islamiyah tends to use certain recruitment patterns. Firstly, they use ideology as an instrument. Generally, they tend to indoctrinate the ideology of terror, violence, hatred, and the desire to eliminate those who are considered enemies. This ideology resonates with the bay'at system (total loyalty to the leader). Secondly, they use kinship as an instrument. As a terrorist network, Jemaah Islamiyah is a closed-network organization operating underground by storing data and strategies. The main principle on which it is built is the trust that derives from family and kinship. There is evidence that the Bali bombers are siblings, namely Amrozi, Ali Ghurfon and Ali Imron.[59] Moreover, recruiting, training, indoctrination, financial and operational links between the Jemaah Islamiyah and other militant groups, such as al-Qaeda, the Abu Sayyaf Group (ASG), the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), the Misuari Renegade/Breakaway Group (MRG/MBG) and the Philippine Rajah Sulaiman movement (RSM) have existed for many years, and continue to this day.

In addition, Jemaah Islamiyah has shown the ability to operate with different patterns and has on occasion morphed into local terrorist groups. In Indonesia, Jemaah Islamiyah has transformed charities and non-gevernmental agencies (NGOs), such Majelis Mujahidin Indonesia, created in Yogyakarta 1999 into radical Islamic organizations. This includes established publisher Wihdah Press, a magazine (Risâlah Mujâhidîn), and also Ar-Rahmah Media. Majelis Mujahidin Indonesia also serves as a link between Jemaah Islamiyah and Saudi financiers. Many Majelis Mujahidin Indonesia leaders hold or have held concurrent positions in Saudi charities and their Indonesian counterparts have been used to support terrorist activities. These include the Saudi Al-Haramain and the International Islamic Relief Organization, and two Indonesian charities, KOMPAK and the Medical Emergency Relief Charity.[60] Like Al Qaeda, Jemaah Islamiyah has evolved into a separatist group in southern Thailand and the southern Philippines. While in Malaysia, Jemaah Islamiyah was transformed into an organization of Islamic doctrine.

---

[58] M Sageman, Understanding Terror Networks (Pennsylvania: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2004), 140.
[59] M.G Romli, Ustadz, saya sudah di surga (Jakarta: KataKita, 2007), 15.

Al Qaeda also relies on individuals especially in diaspora communities to commit terrorist acts, especially in Europe. The individual may be less competent but he/she is still capable of carrying out more bloody terrorist acts. For example, the Madrid bombing was carried out by a Moroccan migrant. This was also the case with the immigrant who was responsible for the London subway bombing.

Before the event of 9/11, Al Qaeda was backed up by two models of cell members: support networks which distributed propaganda, fund raised, trained supported and provided safe housing, and secondly operational networks which conducted the terrorist acts.[61] Each cell had its own duties and responsibilities to succeed in terrorist attacks.

However, in the post 9/11 period, the support networks in Europe and North America were transformed into operational networks. This was apparent in the Madrid bombing which was conducted by support networks which had changed into operational networks. They were free to act and conduct terror operations without any instruction from the supreme leader. Esa al Britani, the leader of a terrorist cell, for example, avoided using mobile phones, never had credit card or a bank account and always moved from home to home in order to avoid the supervision and surveillance of government, police and security force.[62]

---

[60] Z Abuza, "Jemaah Islamiyah Adopts the Hezbollah Model; Assessing Hezbollah's Influence", Middle east quarterly, Winter, 2009, vol. xvi, no. 1. 2009. 139.
[61] Gunaratna, Inside Al Qaeda, 43.

This means that Al Qaeda networks and cells still exist as ideological movements in Europe and North America (and other places), although they are no longer present as formal organizations anymore.

Conclusion

From the short description above, the terrorist groups still exist and are present everywhere. It may be in the color of non-state terrorist movement, ideological groups, religio-political groups or religion-based ideology. Furthermore, some of these groups have evolved and morphed into the new patterns of terrorist movement. They have new tactics, strategies, loose organization, decentralized command and control adjusting to the global war against terrorism. Their terror action tends to be less anticipated and unpredictable. The best example of this is Al Qaeda and its affiliates which are motivated by anti-Western religious ideology.

In this context, I have considered concentration and full alert needed by Western countries in particular, as well as other countries around the world, to specifically give attention to the global war against terrorism. Hit and run tactics practiced by the terrorist organization provided a valuable lesson and demonstrated that the global war on terrorism needs to be improved. This is because of the spirit of Jihad and ready to die for honor, nation, and religion are the main reasons for the perpetrators of terror, both at national, regional, or transnational levels post-event 9/11.

The assumption that by invading and destroying the states where the terrorist organizations are based, as was done in Afghanistan or Iraq, terrorism would end has proven to be an assumption that is not entirely true. Similarly, the capturing and killing of several high-ranking terrorists from organizations like Al Qaeda, or Jemaah Islamiyah (JI) in Southeast Asia does not guarantee an end to terrorism.

---

[62] Ibid., 55.

The arrest of terrorist top leaders, affiliates and cells do not necessarily mean that terrorism will disappear and remove its threat. In fact, the invasion by the United States and its allies of Afghanistan, and Iraq, the arrests and killing of a number of members of terrorist organization, had led to changes in terrorist organizations, patterns, strategies and targets, which in turn will complicate the efforts of many countries in countering terrorism in the context of the global war against terrorism.

Bibliography

Abuza, Z. "Jemaah Islamiyah Adopts the Hezbollah Model; Assessing Hezbollah's Influence". Dalam Middle east quarterly, Winter, 2009, Vol. xvi, No. 1., 2009.

Buckley, M and Fawn, R (ed.). Global Response to Terrorism, 9/11, Afghanistan and Beyond. London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2003.

Chaliand, G and Blin, A. (ed.). The History of Terrorism from Antiquity to Al Qaeda. Los Angeles: University of California Press, 2007.

Enders, W. The Political Economy of Terrorism. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2006.

Ganor, B. Terrorist Organisation Typologies and The Probability of a Boomerang Effect, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism. London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2008.

Greenberg, K (ed.). Al Qaeda Now, Understanding Today's Terrorist. New York: Cambridge University Press, 2005.

Gunaratna, R. Countering Terrorism: Can We Meet the Threat of Global Violence? London: Reaktion Book Ltd., 2007.

Gunaratna, R. Inside Al Qaeda, Global Network of Terror. New York: Columbia University Press, 2002.

Harik, P.P. Hezbollah, the Changing Face of Terrorism. London: I.B. Tauris & Co. Ltd., 2005.

Hillman, Ben. "Aceh's Rebels Turn to Ruling", dalam Far Eastern Economic Review, Vol. 170, No. 1, January-February, 2007.

Hoffman, B. Change and Continuity in Terrorism, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism. London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2001.

_____. The Changing Face of Al Qaeda and the Global War on Terrorism, Studies in Conflict & Terrorism, Vol. 27. London: Routledge Taylor & Francis Group, 2004.

_____. Inside Terrorism. New York: Columbia University Press, 2006.

http://www.meforum.org/2044/jemaah-islamiyah-adopts-the-hezbollah-model.

Jones, D.M. (ed.). Globalisation and the New Terror. Cheltenham: Edward Elgar, 2004.

Juergensmeyer, M. Terror in the Mind of God. Barkeley: University of California Press, 2003.

Kegley, C (ed.). The New Global Terrorism: Characteristic, Causes, Controls. New Jersey: Prentice-Hall, 2003.

Mannes, A. Profiles in Terror; The Guide to Middle East Terrorist Organisation. United States: Rowman & Littlefield Publishers, Inc., 2004.

Nacos, B. Terrorism and counterterrorism, understanding threats and responses in the post-9/11 world. New York: Longman Publisher, 2008.

Ramakrishna, K and Tan, S. S (eds.). After Bali the Threat of Terrorism Southeast Asia. Singapore: Institute of Defence and Strategies Studies, 2003.

Romli, M.G. Ustadz, saya sudah di surge. Jakarta: KataKita, 2007.

Sabasteanski, A. (ed.). Patterns of Global Terrorism 1985-2000, U.S Department of State Reports with Supplementary Documents and Statistics. Massachusetts: Berkshire Publishing Group, Great Barrington, 2005.

Sageman, M. Understanding Terror Networks. Pennsylvania: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2004.

_____. Leaderless Jihad: Terror Networks in the Twenty-First Century. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 2008.

Tan, A.T (ed.). A Hand Book of Terrorism and Insurgency in Southeast Asia. Cornwall: Edward Elgar Publishing Limited, 2007.

Whittaker, D.J. (ed.). The Terrorism Reader. New York: Routledge, 2001.

Wilkinson, T.J. Archaeological Landscapes of the Near East. Tucson: The University of Arizona Press, 2003.

Wilkinson, P. Terrorism versus Democracy, the Liberal State Response. New York: Routledge, 2006.

William, C. Terrorism Explained, the Fact About Terrorism and Terrorist Groups. Adelaide: New Holland Publishers, 2004.